

January 9, 2018

Semester 1 is coming to a close on January, 23 with mid-terms taking place from January, 18 to January, 23. First, it is important to note that in addition to earning at least 70 in each competency, students need to score at least 60 on both their mid-term and final assessments in order to pass a course. Also, we no longer have a recovery day at the end of the mid-term schedule as we have in previous years. If recovery is needed, students now need to make arrangements with teachers individually.

In terms of attendance, students are expected to attend mid-terms for the entire allotted time during the times designated for their academic classes (see the table below). Students are not expected to attend for the designated times in which they normally have an academic lab, transition lab, or open campus. For instance, students are allowed to arrive late to school during the 10:00-10:30 break if the first block of their day is an academic lab, transition lab, or open campus. Conversely, students are also allowed to leave for the day during the 10:00-10:30 break prior to an academic lab, transition lab, or open campus. An exception is if a student with a transition lab, primarily a freshmen non-academic class, is in the building during the designated time when their transition lab is meeting. In this case, those students should report to their transition lab teacher in their usual classroom.

Also, the portal will be closed during exams for grading.
